Seigler Building & Development — September 2026 Digital Advertising Summary

Reporting period: September 1 – September 28, 2026

Twelve Weeks on the New Website

The new website went live on July 6. September closes out its first twelve weeks, which is long enough to step back from month-to-month movement and ask the question that matters most: how much more often does Seigler now show up when people search? Comparing the 85 days since launch with the 85 days before it, the answer is clear.

- Appearances in Google search results: 21,602, up from 8,487 — 2.5 times as many
- Clicks from unpaid Google results: 296, up from 135 — more than double
- Average ranking position: 23.6, improved from 30.5
- Pages of the site that Google shows to searchers: 63, up from 18
- Visitors sent by AI assistants such as ChatGPT: 56, up from 9

Most of that growth comes from pages that did not exist before July. The town, lake and community pages built for the new site, along with the new remodeling pages, have drawn 10,818 search appearances and 93 clicks on their own. That is half of all the site's search visibility since launch, and nearly a third of its search clicks.

The Month in Numbers

- 6 genuine inquiries through the website contact form, each verified individually
- 6 phone taps and 4 email clicks from the site
- Website visits: 887 (vs 891 the prior 28 days), with 1,471 pages viewed
- Unpaid Google search clicks: 101, with a click-through rate of 1.9%, up from 1.4%
- Google Ads: 9,843 impressions and 547 clicks at $1,619 in spend

The Inquiries

Six people contacted Seigler through the website in September about a real project. They are drawn directly from the site's own submission records. Test entries, sales pitches, a job application and two scam submissions have been removed, so this is the complete list:

- September 7 — Robert Campbell, Loudon (Tellico Village area). Wants to discuss building a new home and how the process works.
- September 12 — Randall Neighbour, Rutledge. Has a newly acquired lot, a floor plan and elevations, and offered to arrange mechanical and structural surveys for an accurate estimate.
- September 13 — Casey Mertens, Cherokee Lake (Rutledge). Relocating from Colorado after buying a lakefront lot; looking for a builder to design and build their "forever" lake home. Said Seigler came up in their search.
- September 18 — Saul Acosta, Gatlinburg. Owns a lot with engineer-drafted plans and would like to discuss fees.
- September 18 — Troy Brown, Hardin Valley. Asking what it would take to build the Timberline Estate as shown on the website.
- September 20 — Crystal & Michael Todd, Hardin Valley. A young family in the process of buying land, looking for a firm to design and build a custom home around their needs.

Six is the strongest month of verified inquiries since the new site launched. The pattern is worth noticing. Four of the six already own land or are buying it, two include plans or drawings, and one came from a family who found Seigler while searching from another state. These are people ready to build on their own land, which is exactly the prospect the new site was written for. Two came from Hardin Valley and one directly references a project from the Signature Projects gallery.

Google Search: The Picture Since Launch

Before the new site, Seigler appeared in Google results roughly 100 times a day. Since launch it has averaged about 250. The weekly view shows how that built up:

- July: Google discovered and began ranking the new pages. Weekly clicks rose from 8 in the first week to 28 by the third.
- August: the strongest month so far, with 118 clicks and an average position of 21.
- September: 101 clicks, and the final full week (September 21–27) produced 39 clicks, the best week since launch.

The search terms show how far the reach now extends. In September the site ranked on the first page of Google for 113 different searches, and in the top three for 34. Examples include "home builder farragut tn" (position 1), "custom builder friendsville" (2), "custom home builder lenoir city tn" (4.7), "custom home builder oak ridge tn" (7.5) and "luxury mountain home builder sevier county" (9.5). Several searches appeared for the first time this month, including "luxury custom home builder east tennessee" and "custom home builder seymour tn."

The pages doing the most work since launch are the ones built for specific places. Friendsville, Farragut, Sevierville, Alcoa, Pigeon Forge, Maryville, Norris Lake and Kingston have each drawn roughly 500 to 1,200 search appearances. Norris Lake (18 clicks) and Sevierville (17) are the two new pages sending the most visitors.

A Straight Read on September Alone

Taken on its own, September's headline search figure is lower than August's: 5,224 search appearances against 7,943 over the previous 28 days. We want to explain that plainly rather than leave it unaddressed.

Almost half of the August figure came from just two days, August 5 and 6, which together logged 3,781 appearances. That spike was spread evenly across roughly 300 different town and remodeling searches, each showing up about the same number of times and almost none clicked. That is the fingerprint of an automated tool checking rankings, not of people searching. Set those two days aside and the site averaged about 160 appearances a day in August against 187 a day in September — a 17% increase.

The measure that reflects real people points the same way. September's click-through rate was 1.9%, up from 1.4%: a larger share of the people who saw Seigler in search chose to click. The second half of the month was stronger still, with 63 clicks in the last two weeks against 38 in the first two.

Remodeling Is Now the Largest Search Theme

Remodeling and renovation searches accounted for nearly 2,000 search appearances in September — more than half of all identifiable search visibility. "Luxury home remodeling" grew from 26 appearances to 322, and "luxury home renovation" (223), "luxury remodeling company" (78) and "high end home renovation" (52) all appeared for the first time. The Luxury Renovations page alone has drawn 6,799 appearances since launch, double its pre-launch figure.

There is still no advertising aimed at remodeling work. The demand is clearly there and growing month after month. If high-end renovation is work Seigler wants more of, this is the most obvious opportunity in the data.

AI Assistants Are Now Sending Visitors

More people now ask AI assistants such as ChatGPT for recommendations instead of, or alongside, searching Google. When an assistant cites or links a website in its answer, some of those people click through. That traffic is now measurable, and it is growing:

- 56 visits from AI assistants since launch (52 from ChatGPT, 4 from Microsoft Copilot), against 9 in the 85 days before — roughly six times as many
- September's AI visitors were the most engaged of any source on the site: 79% engaged, averaging just over a minute per visit, against 31 seconds for paid search visitors

The numbers are still small. The quality is what makes them worth watching. AI assistants build their answers from what they can read on a website, and the new site's detailed town, lake and community pages give them far more to work with than the old site did.

There is an early sign of this in Google itself. A handful of long, conversational questions began showing Seigler in September — for example, "who handles complex luxury remodels and custom homes?" and a detailed question about gated lakefront communities near Knoxville for retirement, where Seigler ranked second. These are the kind of full-sentence questions people type into AI-style search. The volume is tiny for now, but it is new.

Unpaid Visitors Still Read Most Carefully

Visits from unpaid Google search are up 139% since launch (370 against 155 in the equivalent period before). September brought 140 such visits, down from August's 158, with the dip concentrated in the first half of the month. These visitors remain the most attentive on the site: 71% engaged, averaging 1 minute 24 seconds per visit, nearly three times the 31 seconds averaged by visitors from ads. Total site visits held steady at 887.

Paid Search: The First Two Weeks of the Rebuild

The Google Ads account was rebuilt on September 16 to shift spending away from broad "custom home builder" searches and toward lakefront, luxury and high-end terms. September therefore splits roughly in half between the old setup and the new one, so a full verdict belongs in next month's report.

- Impressions: 9,843 (down 3% on the prior 28 days)
- Clicks: 547 (flat)
- Spend: $1,619, at an average of $2.96 per click

The shift has started. In August, 86% of ad impressions went to the generic group. In September that fell to 78%. The three premium groups (luxury, lakefront and high-end) doubled their share, from 1.6% of impressions to 3.8%. That is the direction intended, but it remains a small share, and the next two weeks will show whether it grows as the new bids settle. As we noted last month, expect fewer clicks at a higher cost each as the account moves toward more selective searches; that is by design.

Where This Points

Twelve weeks in, the new website has changed how visible Seigler is. The business appears in Google two and a half times as often as it did before July, from more than three times as many pages, and ranks on the first page for well over a hundred searches across the service area. AI assistants have started sending visitors, and they are among the most engaged on the site. September also delivered the most verified inquiries of any month since launch, most of them from people who already own land.

Two things to watch next. First, the ad account's shift toward premium searches, which gets its first full month in October. Second, remodeling: it is now the largest theme in Seigler's search visibility, and nothing is being spent to meet it.
